CISM Managers Guide

A Tool to Guide You through Magellan’s CISM Process

© September 2010, Magellan Health Services, Inc
After a Critical Incident: a Manager’s Guide

As a manager or supervisor, you play an important role in providing support to employees following a critical incident. During this time, your staff may experience a variety of changes in productivity and conduct. Employees will need emotional support and understanding, while you focus on maintaining stable work performance. How you respond to these demands is vital.

Additional information, self-help tools and other resources are available online at www.MagellanHealth.com. Or call us for more information, help and support. Counselors are available 24 hours a day, seven days a week to provide confidential assistance at no cost to you.

Reviewing the materials in this packet will help you anticipate and prepare for common employee responses to trauma and severe stress. As a manager, remember that you too are affected by stress in the workplace. We encourage you to use EAP resources for yourself as well.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

THE “WHAT” AND “WHY” OF CRITICAL INCIDENT STRESS MANAGEMENT .............................................3

PREPARING YOUR WORKPLACE FOR ON-SITE SERVICES ........................................................................4

WHAT TO EXPECT FROM A CISM GROUP INTERVENTION ......................................................................5

KEY ISSUES MANAGERS FACE FOLLOWING A CRITICAL INCIDENT ....................................................6

NOW WHAT? KEEPING IT SIMPLE ........................................................................................................7

THE GRIEF PROCESS ..............................................................................................................................8

WHAT DO I SAY? BASIC COMMUNICATION SKILLS ........................................................................9

WHEN YOU GET THE CALL ....................................................................................................................10
The “What” and “Why” of Critical Incident Stress Management

What is a “Critical Incident?”
A critical incident is an abnormal or traumatic event “which has the potential to overwhelm one’s usual coping mechanisms resulting in psychological distress and an impairment of normal adaptive functioning.”
In the workplace, this might be an event that could result in deficits in employee conduct or productivity. Examples of critical incidents in the workplace include: suicide; homicide; robbery; assault; threats of violence; worksite accidents; industrial and natural disasters; and organizational changes like restructuring or reductions in force. Critical incidents may affect a few individuals or an entire company.

What is Critical Incident Stress Management (CISM)?
CISM describes a wide array of services designed to support individuals who have experienced a critical incident. The CISM team at Magellan addresses those incidents that impact the workplace. Magellan offers a continuum of services that are based on factors such as incident type, degree of severity, and company needs.

What kind of CISM services does Magellan offer?
A broad range of CISM services are available through Magellan. These include the seven-step Critical Incident Stress Debriefing (CISD), Defusing, Crisis Management Briefings (CMB), Psychological First Aid (PFA), Management Consultations, and One-on-one services. In the days and weeks following a critical incident, Magellan also provides Clinical Follow-up services to gather feedback about service outcomes and offer assistance with any unresolved issues. Research has found that using an integrated approach combining different CISM interventions has a greater positive effect than using just one intervention.

Why should I use CISM services?
Providing an immediate response to a trauma is designed to lessen the effects of the trauma and to identify individuals who may need additional support. Group interventions allow employees to process feelings and concerns in a guided environment with a mental health professional. The confidential nature of the services provides an additional level of reassurance to employees who may be experiencing anxiety or stress in the workplace and are unsure about where to find resources and support.

---

After a Critical Incident: A Manager’s Guide
Revised 9/7/2010
Preparing Your Workplace for On-site Services

Remember: a critical event will impact each employee differently.
For the purpose of group CISM services, it may be necessary to divide employees into groups based on their exposure to the critical incident.

Secure an appropriate meeting area:
Find a room that is private and quiet. Arrange the chairs for an interactive meeting (if possible in a U-shape). Group sizes may vary, so be flexible.

Encourage participation:
Through written and verbal communication, encourage employees to attend. Employees are often concerned about whether attending a CISM service will be confidential and how it might impact their work. Assure employees that their participation is voluntary and let them know you have set aside time from their regular duties to attend.
What to Expect from a CISM Group Intervention

At the beginning of a group, the on-site counselor outlines what will happen. The counselor facilitates an exploration of the critical incident, including the facts, thoughts, feelings and reactions to the event. Employees are encouraged to participate at their own comfort level throughout the group.

The objectives of CISM groups are:

- to provide employees with an understanding of normal responses to abnormal events;
- to equip employees with healthy coping skills and identify risk behaviors;
- to identify employees who may need additional or individual support;
- to increase cohesion within a group following a critical event;
- to decrease risk of developing further symptoms;
- to return employees to their previous level of functioning in the workplace.

Based on the group process, the on-site counselor may recommend a follow-up group or other service to be provided at a later date. If you would like additional on-site services, please call Magellan’s CISM Intake Line for support.

STRESS-RELATED PROBLEMS ARE REAL. Unresolved emotional distress can cause poor work performance and the loss of good employees. Ensuring that employees know where to find help and making that help easily accessible can significantly improve the recovery process after a critical incident.

If you have any concern about employee performance following a critical incident, consult your EAP Workplace Support Team. Magellan has specially trained clinicians available to work with managers, supervisors, and human resource personnel. Management consultations are included in your CISM services at no extra cost and are available to you 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.
Key Issues Managers Face Following a Critical Incident

⇒ Work Performance
Employee work performance may be directly or indirectly affected by a critical incident. Temporarily taking a more tolerant approach may be helpful when dealing with employee schedules and time off requests.

⇒ Productivity
Productivity remains a key supervisory responsibility. Employees should be aware that the company expectation is for employees to resume previous performance levels. Managers need to be supportive and understanding while simultaneously keeping the business running. One of the most effective strategies is simply showing gratitude to employees for coming to work and doing the best they can.

⇒ High Levels of Emotion
During the first days following a trauma employees may have crying spells, be highly distractible, be unusually irritable, or show other symptoms of distress. This is normal and improves quickly for most people. Managers should remain calm and supportive. Managers should consult with the EAP on employees who are not quickly recovering.

⇒ Limitations
Recognize your limits as a manager or supervisor. You are not expected to be a counselor or social worker for employees. Focus on work performance. For non-work related issues, refer employees to available resources, like EAP and mental health services.
Now What? Keeping It Simple

Address safety and physical needs first.
If safety is an issue, assist employees in moving to a safe location as soon as possible.
Ensure employees’ physical needs are met (e.g. food, water, tissues).

Be aware of common stress and trauma reactions.
Anger, frustration, irritability
Withdrawal, isolation
Tearfulness, uncontrollable crying
Shock, confusion, disorientation, denial
Shaking, dizziness, chest pain, other physical complaints

Confirm your support.
Remember that everyone responds to stress differently.
Employees may experience many different feelings at the same time.
Sometimes just being present is the most supportive thing you can do.
It's okay if you don't know the “right words” to say.

Don’t try to fix the problem.
Avoid statements with good intentions like “I understand how you feel” and “Everything will be just fine.”
There is often no satisfying explanation for what has happened. Don’t try to explain or make sense out of a critical incident.
Give information only if you are sure it has been verified. It is common in crisis situations for the “facts” to change and result in miscommunication and confusion.

Ensure practical resources are available for employees.
If possible, offer employees a quiet area for making calls or taking a break.
Allow flexibility with employee schedule and time-off. Employees may need time to arrange funeral services, run errands, and/or support family members.
Have appropriate handouts available on related topics, such as coping with stress or dealing with grief.
Provide the Employee Assistance Program (EAP) toll-free number to any employee who may need one-on-one assistance.
Post the EAP toll-free number where all employees can see it.
Encourage employees to rest and take time for personal activities.

Find time for yourself. Be aware of your own emotions and needs. You can only be of support to others if you have first attended to yourself.
The Grief Process

We normally associate grief with death. In the workplace, grief may be the result of a critical incident or traumatic event. Having a practical understanding of the grief process will enable you to better support your employees. It may take employees weeks, months or even longer to fully process their grief. Tears and sadness are the most commonly accepted expressions of grief. In reality, grief is much more complex.

There are three basic phases of grief:

Avoidance
During this phase, common feelings include shock, denial and disbelief. The bereaved will commonly avoid all talk of the deceased or the circumstances of death.

Confrontation
This phase is described as a “highly charged and emotional state”. The bereaved often experience feelings of anger and frustration. In some circumstances, they may feel guilt or remorse.

Accommodation
This phase typically signals the beginning of the healing process. The feelings of acute grief begin to decline and the bereaved is able to return to their previous level of functioning. This is often referred to as acceptance of the loss.

MYTHS ABOUT GRIEF:

* All losses are the same.
* All people grieve in the same way.
* Managers should be able to “fix” the problem.
* Grief does not cause physical illness.
* When grief is resolved, it never comes up again.
* Anger is wrong.
* Children need to be protected from grief and loss.
* We can return to “business as usual.”
* Grief can be handled without support from others.
* Crying is a sign of weakness.
* Ignoring feelings will make them go away.
* Memorials and funerals are unimportant to employees.
* Strong employees don’t show emotions at work.

---

After a Critical Incident: A Manager’s Guide
Revised 9/7/2010
What Do I Say? Basic Communication Skills

As a manager or supervisor, you will be expected to support employees following a critical incident. You may worry that you will say “the wrong thing” in these circumstances. Your presence and compassion are the most important resources during this time. The following is a list of basic supportive communication skills to guide you in talking with employees.

- Use accurate language. When referring to a death, for example, use died rather than a euphemism such as passed away.
- Expect employees to talk about the event and their reactions and feelings to it.
- Familiarize yourself with the basics of the grieving process. As you listen to and work with employees, take note of any significant changes in behavior. Examples include attendance issues, forgetfulness, irritability, and decreased productivity.
- Know when to refer an employee for professional help. This may be based on observed changes in behavior or from concerns the employee brings directly to you.
- Make EAP and other resources easily available through EAP and brochures.
- Respect employee confidentiality—regardless of whether the details of a critical incident are widely known or the media have gotten involved.
- Recognize that employees may indirectly try to get you to make decisions for them. Instead, direct them to the EAP and their own support network (friends, family).
- Respect cultural and social diversity among your employees. This is particularly important in times of crisis, when employees are more likely to talk about their personal values and beliefs.
- Avoid statements that, although well intended, may devalue an employee’s experiences or feelings. (See “Phrases to Avoid” below.)

Phrases to Avoid

“I don’t understand why this is still bothering you. Everyone else seems to be handling this just fine.”

“It could’ve been worse. It’s not like it was a close relative or anything.”

“I’m sure he’s in a better place now.”

“I know how you feel. I had the very same thing happen to me.”

“Everything will be just fine.”
When You Get The Call . . .

- Get information about the situation.
- Address safety and physical needs.
- Be supportive. Just listening is often the most supportive thing you can do.
- Be available.
- Use accurate language.
- Use a gentle, calm tone of voice.
- Expect chaos.
- Encourage employees to express grief.
- Be flexible.
- Recognize your limits. You are not expected to be a therapist for employees.
- Find time for yourself.
- Refer to EAP or other community resources.
- Report all threats of violence to appropriate authorities.
- Respect employee confidentiality.
- Respect cultural diversity.